Wellness tip, did you know?

"The benefits of gratitude."

Is it true you can become healthier and happier by practicing gratitude?

The Short answer is yes, research suggests that gratitude can make people happier, improve relationships, and potentially even counteract depression and suicidal thoughts. Gratitude can also boost self-esteem. expressing gratitude boosts dopamine and serotonin, the neurotransmitters that improve your mood immediately, giving you those positive feelings of pleasure, happiness, and well-being.

Each day as we practice gratitude, we can help these neural pathways in our brain strengthen and ultimately create a permanent grateful, positive nature within ourselves.
